SpaCom is looking for global distributors for its growing industrial product portfolio.

Huntington, NY. Today SpaCom, the Spare Part and Component Company, announced that it is looking to build partnerships with global distributors for its growing industrial products portfolio. "By now we have established a vast network of manufacturing partners who can supply a variety of high quality industrial products in metal fabrication related processes, such as vacuum blasting, coating, welding and others, as well as numerous custom or standard manufactured parts for many industrial applications, such as castings or valves and bearings. Our capabilities also include nearly every conceivable metal fabrication process for contract manufacturing and outsourcing services. It's time now to focus on the marketing and selling of those products and services through an effective network of global distributors." says Peter Hanneforth, President and founder of SpaCom.

The company is poised to become a global leader in supplying high quality, low cost industrial parts and components, as well as providing reliable contract manufacturing, outsourcing and consulting services, leveraging a network of manufacturing partners in China. "Through our partners in China we have access to more than 2,000 ISO certified production facilities, manufacturing everything from castings to parts and components to complete machinery at extremely competitive prices. We encourage companies worldwide who are interested in joining the SpaCom network to contact us for more information about how to benefit from SpaCom's value proposition. Due to our low manufacturing cost we are able to offer the most generous discounts to our distributors and create value for everyone involved."
